In Paints A few paint manufacturers raised the price of prepared paint this spring. The Sherwin-Williams Company was one of them. It stands to reason that pure linseed oil paints must cost more than they used to with oil advanced 60c a gallon.

Of course, those paints that are largely composed of water do not need to sell for more unless we have a very unusual drought. If you are buying paint this spring, ask for the analysis and weight per gallon rather than price, unless you really think that water is as good a preservative as linseed oil. We have about 100 gallons purchased before the raise which we will sell at 10 per cent, less than new list.
